An informative Museum sign has been situated on the lawn next to the county parking lot east of the Museum for a number of years. Several few months ago, it mysteriously disappeared "without a trace."

We are happy to report this sign has been replaced, and there are now informational signs in front of the south face and the east face of the Museum.
New artifacts on display on Level 2 in SE corner ~ 3rd quarter

These items were donated by Bruce B. Penwell, Jr. Mr. Penwell’s mother was related to the local Jennings, Laue, and Larimore families.

(Collection Plan: Family/transportation)

The chair is a 1880s "mule ear" chair. It is constructed of sturdy hard wood (which appears to be linden). The seams are "fitted," meaning there are neither nails nor screws. The rush seats are replacement surfaces. The chair was transported from Texas to Illinois by Noah Jennings and his wife in the 1880s by horse-drawn wagon. Prior to that time, Mr. Jennings had moved his family to Texas to engage in cotton farming. When that did not work out, they came back north to Beecher City and farmed there. The stool was made of walnut and has a cane seat. It was constructed by a Mr. Winterowd of Beecher City in the 1960s. He was 93 at the time.

CONSERVATION @ the Local Level

SAVING FAMILY PHOTOS from WATER DAMAGE in an EMERGENCY

Sometimes professional pictures in frames and snapshots in albums are the only things we have to go along with our memories of births, baptisms, confirmations, birthdays, weddings, family reunions and long ago travels.

When memories fade and older family members pass on, it's those pictures and snapshots we count on to serve as a record of important events in family life.

So, what will you do when the roof leaks or the pipes burst or the sump pump fails or the river overflows, and those precious photographic records are in danger?

Here are some practical tips, adapted from "Saving Photographs After the Flood", by the AMERICAN INSTITUTE FOR CONSERVATION (AIC).

1/ Work on photographs that have no backup negatives or digital copy first.

2/ Rinse wet photos with plain water, if needed. The surface is fragile; be gentle.

3/ Seal the wet photos in ziploc bag, or garbage bag with a twist tie. Put wax paper between layers of photographs.

4/ Freeze them right away - later you will thaw them, separate them, and lay them out in a single layer to air dry.

5/ If no freezer is available, rinse the photos with plain water and dry them naturally.

6/ Put them face up in single layer on a flat surface. If you have a window screen, use that. Alternately, depending on how many you have, you use a table or a piece of plastic sheeting laid on ground or on cement.

7/ Don't expose the photos to direct sunlight. Don't worry if they curl. They can be flattened later. A photography shop can help you with that.

8/ Professional conservators can assist with valuable materials and with severely damaged materials.

Retired nurse educator, Marilyn Fuqua Thompson recently donated a collection of 23 nursing and education pins to the museum.

(Collection plan: medical/education)

The top pin celebrates the National League for Nursing. One arm of the NLN is tied to accreditation for local nursing programs like the ones at Lake Land College.

The other pins were issued over the years by the American Nurses Association to celebrate Nurses Week during the first week of May each year. The timing is significant because Florence Nightengale’s birthday is May 12. Year 2020 is the 200th anniversary of her birthday.

The pins are significant in Illinois, because the very FIRST Nurses Day in the United States was celebrated in this state. There was a nursing shortage after World War 2. Father Clarence Brissette organized the first parade in Chicago in 1949, in the hope of inspiring more people to enter the profession. The parades continued through 1958. The last one featured 4,000 marching nurses, 100 floats and 30 bands.

There is also local significance because St. Anne’s Hospital School of Nursing was a participant in these parades, as illustrated above.¹ The Adams family nurses from Teutopolis were working or going to school at St. Anne’s during this era. Nurses’ Day at the national level was first proposed in 1953, but it wasn’t until 1974 that President Nixon issued the first proclamation. In 1982, the American Nurses Association formally acknowledged Nurses’ Day. In 1990, the ANA Board of Directors expanded the recognition, declaring May 5-12 as National Nurses Week.
